What Coding Classes Can Do for You

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 124 words · L1

코딩 수업이 남긴 것

Many schools around the world now offer coding classes. Students learn to write instructions that computers can follow. This kind of learning is called programming.

Coding is more than just a computer skill. When students work through a coding problem, they have to think carefully and try different solutions. This helps them practise logical thinking.

Some studies suggest that students who learn coding may also improve in subjects like math. Thinking in steps and finding mistakes in code can strengthen problem-solving skills that are useful in many areas.

As technology grows, coding skills are becoming more valuable. Many jobs in the future will need people who understand how computers work. Starting young gives students a head start in a world that runs on technology.

Scientists Plan to Clean Up Space Junk

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 171 words · L2

우주 쓰레기를 치우는 계획

Thousands of broken satellites and rocket pieces are floating in space around Earth. Scientists call this "space debris," and it is becoming a serious and growing problem. Some pieces travel faster than a bullet, making them extremely dangerous.

This junk threatens working satellites that people depend on every day. It can also damage spacecraft that carry astronauts on important missions. Even a very small piece can cause serious harm when it moves at such high speed.

Several cleanup plans are now being tested by space agencies around the world. One idea uses a spacecraft with robotic arms to grab old satellites and bring them down. Another plan fires pulses of gas at debris to slow it down. When it slows, gravity pulls it back into Earth's atmosphere, where it safely burns up.

NASA and other space agencies agree that cleaning up space is now urgent. More satellites are being launched every year, making the overall problem worse. Scientists hope that new technology will make space safer for everyone in the future.

웹툰이 해외로 나가는 길

Webtoons are digital comics that you scroll through on a phone or computer. They started in South Korea, but now millions of people around the world read them every week.

Webtoons are easy to read because they are made for small screens. The stories are split into short episodes, so readers can finish one quickly. Many webtoons are free to read online.

In recent years, webtoon publishers have translated popular series into many languages. English, Spanish, and French versions have found large audiences. Some popular webtoons have even become TV shows or movies.

Many young creators now make their own webtoons and share them on global platforms. Fans say the colorful art style and exciting stories make webtoons special. The future looks bright for this Korean art form.

New Tools Help Schools Catch AI Homework

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 141 words · L1

챗봇이 쓴 숙제를 가려내는 학교

Schools around the world are using new tools to find out if students used AI chatbots to write their homework. This has become a big problem as chatbots like ChatGPT can write essays in seconds.

One well-known tool is called GPTZero. A student at Princeton University built it to help teachers check if an essay was written by a person or by an AI. The tool looks at patterns in the writing to decide.

A high school student also created a newer tool. It studies each student's own writing style. Then it checks if new work matches how that student usually writes. This makes it harder for students to cheat.

Teachers say these tools are helpful. They also want students to think about why honest work matters. Some schools are changing homework so that AI cannot easily do it for students.

Why Are Delivery Fees Going Up?

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 135 words · L1

배달비가 오르면 생기는 일

Food delivery is very popular in South Korea, and millions of people order meals through apps every day. However, delivery fees have been rising steadily, so customers are now paying much more than before.

Delivery fees go up for several reasons. Fuel costs more, so drivers spend more money on each trip. Apps also charge higher service fees to both restaurants and customers to cover their costs.

When fees rise too high, some people stop ordering delivery altogether. They choose to cook at home or eat at restaurants instead. Small restaurants can struggle because they lose regular customers and earn less money.

Higher fees affect everyone differently. Customers spend more, and restaurants earn less profit. Delivery drivers, however, sometimes earn a little more. Many people are now asking how everyone can share costs more fairly.

Should Schools Start Later for Teens?

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 146 words · L1

청소년 수면 시간과 등교 시각

Many teenagers do not get enough sleep. Doctors say that teens need about eight to ten hours of sleep each night. However, most schools start very early in the morning.

When school starts early, students have to wake up before their bodies are ready. This is because teenagers have a natural body clock that makes them feel sleepy later at night. So it is hard for them to fall asleep early.

Not getting enough sleep can cause serious problems. Tired students find it harder to focus in class and remember what they learn. Some studies also show that sleepy teens are more likely to get sick.

Some countries have already moved school start times to later in the morning. Students in these places reported feeling more awake and doing better at school. Many health experts believe that changing school hours could help millions of young people.

Street Trees Do More Than Look Pretty

By Sunny · 2026-09-21 · 132 words · L1

도시의 가로수가 하는 일

Cities around the world are planting more trees along their streets. These trees do important jobs that help both people and the environment.

Street trees work like natural air filters. They absorb harmful gases from cars and factories, and their leaves catch tiny dust particles. This helps make the air in cities cleaner and safer to breathe.

Trees also cool cities down. On hot summer days, they provide shade and release water into the air. Because of this, shaded streets can feel several degrees cooler than streets without any trees.

In addition, tree roots soak up rainwater, which helps prevent flooding on city streets. Many city planners now see street trees as a simple but powerful tool. Planting more of them is one way cities are trying to become healthier and greener.
