Balancing Sports and Studies at School

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 167 words · L2

학교 운동부와 공부의 균형

Many students who play on school sports teams find it hard to keep up with their schoolwork at the same time. Practice sessions, travel to competitions, and physical tiredness can all make studying more difficult.

Student athletes often have very full schedules. On some days, they train for two or more hours after school and then go home to finish homework. This leaves little time to rest.

Some schools have put rules in place to help students manage both sports and studies. For example, a student may need to keep their grades at a certain level to stay on the team. This gives players a reason to take their schoolwork seriously.

Finding the right balance is not always easy, but many students say it is possible with good time management. Prioritizing — deciding which tasks matter most — is a skill that student athletes often build over time. Interestingly, staying active through sports may also help the brain stay focused, which can make study time more productive.

학교 스포츠 팀에 속한 학생 선수들은 훈련과 학업을 함께 병행해야 하기 때문에 시간적 여유가 부족한 경우가 많다. 일부 학교는 일정 성적을 유지해야 팀에 남을 수 있는 규칙을 두어 학생들이 학업에도 신경 쓰도록 유도하고 있다. 철저한 시간 관리와 우선순위 설정을 통해 운동과 공부의 균형을 잡는 것이 가능하며, 꾸준한 신체 활동이 오히려 집중력 향상에 도움이 될 수 있다.

Racing to Save the World's Lost Languages

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 138 words · L1

사라져가는 언어를 기록하는 사람들

Around the world, thousands of languages are slowly disappearing every year. When the last speaker of a language dies, that language is gone forever. Experts say this is a serious loss for all of humanity.

Today, about 7,000 languages exist on Earth, but nearly half of them are in danger. Some languages have only a small number of elderly speakers left.

Language experts called field linguists travel to remote areas to meet these speakers. They record voices, write down words, and build dictionaries to preserve what remains. Projects like Wikitongues use technology to store these recordings safely online for the future.

This work matters deeply because language carries history, stories, and culture. When a language disappears, all of that knowledge disappears with it. Thanks to these dedicated researchers, some languages may survive as digital records for future generations.

Museums Around the World Return Old Artifacts

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 137 words · L1

박물관이 유물을 돌려주는 문제

Some of the world's biggest museums are giving back objects that they have kept for many years. These objects were often taken from other countries long ago, during times of war or colonial rule.

Returning an object to its home country is called repatriation. Many people believe that artifacts belong with the culture that made them. However, some museums argue that they can protect and share these objects with the world.

In recent years, countries such as Germany and France have returned artifacts to Nigeria and other nations. The British Museum still holds thousands of objects that other countries want back, including famous sculptures from Greece.

This debate is growing louder around the world. Some museums are now working with home countries to decide together what is fair. It is a big question with no easy answer.

Why Used Textbooks Change Hands

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 218 words · L3

중고 교과서가 오가는 이유

Every year, millions of students buy new textbooks for school. But new textbooks can be very expensive, and families often look for a cheaper way.

The Cost Problem

Textbooks are costly because publishers spend a lot of money writing, printing, and updating them. In some countries, a single textbook costs as much as a family's weekly food budget. As a result, many students and parents feel that buying new books every year puts too much pressure on their wallets.

A Smart Solution

Used textbooks offer a simple answer. A student who has already finished a course can sell their old book to someone who needs it. The seller gets a little money back, and the buyer pays much less than the full price. Both sides benefit from the deal.

Online platforms have made this even easier. Students can now list their books on websites or apps, and buyers from anywhere can find them quickly. Some schools also set up their own exchange programs so students can trade books with each other.

Interestingly, publishers sometimes release new editions of a textbook just to reduce the number of used copies in the market. This keeps the demand for new books high. Because of this, used copies of older editions can become very popular among students who want to save money.

한글 요약

새 교과서는 가격이 비싸 학생과 학부모에게 큰 경제적 부담이 되고 있다. 중고 교과서 거래는 판매자와 구매자 모두에게 이익이 되는 해결책으로, 온라인 플랫폼과 학교 교환 프로그램을 통해 더욱 활성화되고 있다. 한편 출판사들은 중고 시장을 줄이기 위해 새 판을 출시하지만, 오히려 이전 판의 중고 교과서를 찾는 학생들이 늘어나는 결과를 낳기도 한다.

Earbuds That Translate Languages While You Travel

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 133 words · L1

번역 이어폰이 바꾸는 여행

Some earbuds can now translate spoken words in real time. You hear a foreign language, and the device turns it into your own language in seconds. This is changing how people travel.

Companies like Waverly Labs and Google have made earbuds with built-in translation. The Pilot earpiece and Google Pixel Buds are two well-known examples. They connect to apps that recognize speech and translate it quickly.

These earbuds can be especially helpful in places where people speak a very different language. A traveler can talk to a local person without knowing any of their words. This makes travel much less stressful.

These devices may also help people in new countries communicate with others around them. As the technology improves, more languages will be supported. Translation earbuds could soon become a common travel tool.

Repair Shops Are Making a Comeback

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 116 words · L1

옷을 고쳐 입는 수선 가게가 늘어난다

More and more people are taking old clothes to repair shops. They choose to fix clothes instead of throwing them away. Fast fashion means buying cheap clothes very often. It creates a huge amount of waste every year.

Repair shops offer a better and more sustainable choice. A skilled tailor can fix torn seams and broken zippers. Tailors can also repair damaged buttons and adjust clothes to fit better. Repairing clothes saves money and reduces waste in landfills.

Many young people around the world are joining the slow fashion movement. They want to buy fewer clothes and use each item for a longer time. Repairing clothes is one simple but meaningful way to make that happen.

Why School Safety Zones Are Hard to Follow

By Sunny · 2026-08-24 · 138 words · L1

학교 앞 안전 구역이 지켜지지 않는 이유

Many countries have special safety zones near schools. In these zones, drivers must slow down and follow strict rules to protect children. However, many drivers do not follow the rules.

There are several reasons for this. Some drivers are in a hurry and do not want to slow down. Others may not notice the signs because they are not clear enough. Some roads near schools are also very busy, which makes it hard for drivers to stop safely.

Enforcing the rules is also difficult. There are not always enough police officers to watch every school zone. Some schools do not have speed cameras, so drivers do not worry about getting caught.

Many parents and teachers want stronger action. They hope that better signs, more cameras, and regular checks will help keep children safe on their way to school.
